The photographs of Bologna-based artist Giuseppe Palmisano are an erotic hybrid of interiors, objects and the human body, rousing questions of identity, intimacy and femininity. His surreal compositions often comprise nude, faceless models draped, wedged or morphed into furnishings and other household objects. The artist plays first chair in this story, sparking a dialogue between the body, domestic design and Palmisano’s first taste of fashion photography. The results are sensual, harmonic and very much part of the furniture.
